

Eugene Recorder Orchestra

When most people think of the recorder, they think of an elementary music class playing a song like Twinkle, Twinkle Little Star. The Eugene Recorder Orchestra is more likely to think of fugues, symphonies, and the full gamut of music over the past 500 years. Come hear an ensemble of 14 of the finest recorder players in Eugene on instruments that range from eight inches to six feet long and cover a range of five octaves. It's a glorious sound, and on October 13, that sound will be magnified by the incredible acoustics of Hope Abbey.

In the ERO's Music to Die For concert, you will be taken from Renaissance works by Gabrieli and Tomkins to the glories of the baroque by JS Bach and Torelli to transcriptions of 19th and 20th century masterpieces by Borodin, Shostakovich, and the dramatic Jupiter movement from Holst's The Planets. ERO concerts are full of surprises, so make plans to attend our next event in the Eugene Masonic Cemetery's Hope Abbey.
